

A Guide to finding the right Online Donation Platform

November 2019

When it comes to taking donations online, charities have an ever-increasing choice of platforms and service providers. While it can be tempting to make the decision solely on price there are a number of factors that organisations need to consider. In this free resource we set out some of the questions you should consider when deciding which online donation platform is right for you, and review ten platforms currently on the market.

Questions to consider when choosing an online donation platform

What's the experience like for supporters?

Ultimately, it is your supporters who will be using the donation platform and their experience matters the most. If the experience is bad there is less chance of them completing their donation or choosing to give again. You need to check what the experience is for your supporters from start to finish. How easy is it to use? How many clicks or pages do you have to go through to make a donation? What barriers are there? How does it feel at each stage of the donation process (including the thank you)? This probably means identifying other charities using that platform and making small donations to see what it is like.

Can it take overseas donations?

Some organisations have large numbers of followers and supporters overseas. This means your website might need to be able to take donations from other countries in other currencies. Not all platforms are able to provide this. If you have a large number of visitors or supporters overseas you should check whether your potential provider can do this.

Can it process regular donations as well as one-off gifts?

If someone has the desire to make a donation to you you might be able to compel them to set up a regular gift. Some donation platforms can enable donors to easily set up regular donations.

Can you run multiple campaigns at the same time?

There might be times when you need to have multiple live campaigns at the same time. For example, you might want to have a donation page for general/core funds and then separate pages for specific projects or appeals. Or your organisation might operate a number of sites and wish to have separate campaign pages for each.

Can you brand the donation page? If not, is the platform trusted by your supporters?

Trust plays a big part in whether people complete a financial transaction on your website. When your supporter reaches your donation page they want to be sure that they can trust that it is legitimate – especially if they have been taken away from your website. Being able to brand the page with your logo, images and brand colours can help with this trust.

Beyond this, some platforms have strong brands that your supporters will be familiar with. Using a platform with strong brand recognition can also help mitigate the risk that supporters will not complete their donation through lack of trust.

Beyond branding, how much of the donation pages can you customise? How easy is it to customise?

A lot of platforms offer you a standard form or template. This means that the extent to which you can customise your page will change platform to platform – in the way you present your fundraising message, in the options available on the donation form and in the messages supporters receive when they complete their donation. Restrictive word counts, formats that prioritise promoting the platform over the charity and donation forms that don't enable you to reflect best practice can all have a negative impact on your fundraising. Having the ability to customise as much of the process as possible enables you to tell your story and engage your supporters in the most appropriate way for you.

How easy is it to administer and download information?

You will need to be able to download information about donations in order to thank people for their gift and to build the relationship with them going forward. Some platforms will send you an email as soon as someone makes a donation to enable you to thank them promptly. Some will enable you to download the data in a format that can be easily imported onto your database. You need to decide what data and information you need and how and when you need it so that you can ensure your online donation platform can provide it. It can also be worth phoning organisations currently using the platform to get their opinions on how easy it is to use from an administrative perspective.

What is the financial risk, and is it good value for money?

Some platforms charge a monthly fee while others take a percentage of any donations made through the platform. You need to consider what level of financial risk you are prepared to take, and what you are going to get for your money. While it can be tempting to go for a completely free platform it is worth remembering that the money you pay is used to develop the site, test new developments and ensure it is reliable. You might find that the compromise for using a free site is less customisation, functionality and reliability and a poorer experience for your supporters. This could end up costing you more in the long run.
